Summer exhibitions now showing at Casey's Art Spaces

Take a journey through the subliminal, the subconscious, and the history of our local landscape this summer in the exhibitions at Casey's Art Spaces. At the Civic Centre Art Space, Lee Clements exhibits her intuitive works made from a disciplined journaling practice, and Julia Daboub presents beautiful wooden sculptures of amazing forms. At Cranbourne Library, Nur Athirah Abdul Rahman's contemporary video art explores her experiences of sleep apnoea in a mesmerising display. At Endeavour Hills Library, Di Lockwood and Heather Merrett, neighbours for many years in Narre Warren North, chart the changes in their local landscape, in evocative prints and mixed media artworks.

Sharon Start and Cr Sam Aziz

Sharon Start receives the 2016 Lindsay King Arts Award

Sharon Start was named the 2016 Lindsay King Award winner at a recent ceremony. The Lindsay King Arts Award is Casey's most prestigious award for the arts, recognising people whose initiatives have made a significant contribution to the arts in Casey. The award was established in 2007 and is named in memory of Cranbourne resident, Lindsay King, whose commitment to the arts and passion for local history, tourism and culture made a positive impact on the community in Casey.

Sharon Start was nominated for her performance skills, charity arts programming work, church and community choir conducting. Sharon founded many locally-based choir groups and has been teaching music and performing arts in primary schools for thirty years in Cranbourne West and Clyde.

For more information on the Lindsay King Arts Award see www.casey.vic.gov.au/arts.

"Born Fall" by Nur Athirah Abdul Rahman

Meet the Makers: creatives in Casey

Nur Athirah Abdul Rahman

Nur is a local artist who recently completed a Bachelor in Fine Arts (Monash University). Her multidisciplinary practice includes video art, textiles (including embroidery) and installation, and more recently analogue photography. Her delicate and intriguing artworks explore her dreams, and her experiences of sleep apnoea and paralysis. Nur's works have elaborate and poetic titles and her videos are slow, meditative works featuring moving forms and liquids but it is unapparent at first glance how they are made.

"My videos are filmed through a macro lens and involve the transformation of black ice cubes.

As they melt through a layer of oil, they turn into little round spheres and then burst into little pieces through a layer of water. It's a bit like watching a science experiment," Nur explains.

Other artworks of Nur's involve threads and textiles. Nur cites Chiharu Shiota's string installation as influential to her, and artist Lee MingWei's practice, "as he incorporates performance, sculpture and audience engagement as part of his work."

To see Nur's artworks, visit Casey's Art Spaces at the Cranbourne Library before 10 December for her solo exhibition, "I once had a dream that a father kept his daughter's favourite toy..."

Laura White

Laura White is a nature-inspired realist oil painter. Laura paints a variety of subjects including still life paintings, plants and other natural forms. Her process involves some underpainting (Flemish technique), with multiple layers of glazing, giving her paintings the lushness and depth true to nature.

Laura took up painting three years ago and is now painting full time. Laura says, "I worked for Victoria Police for almost 24 years, and decided I needed a change. That same year, both my sons moved out of home, and I found myself with a lot of spare time. So I picked up the brushes, never realising that the benefits of art would expand so much further than my canvas."

Laura now studies with the Petruccelli Art Studio in Upper Beaconsfield.

Laura's accomplished paintings are made with Southern Buoy hand stretched canvas, and Art Spectrum oils used with Liquol.

"I find I pick a canvas and stare at it until a concept comes together in my mind," Laura said.

"Sometimes I have a strong craving to paint lush green foliage, and other times, it's the drama of a still life. It's initially an imaginary process, sometimes sourcing photos that might work together. I draw a couple of images to decide on layout, and then focus on lighting and shadows. I usually have five paintings going at once, which is great for me as I hate sitting around waiting for paint to dry!"

See more of Laura's paintings at her upcoming solo exhibition 'The Painted Garden' at Yering Station, in the Yarra Valley in February/March 2017. To find out more, visit Laura's website: www.laurawhiteart.com.

Joy Sellars

Joy Sellars is an indigenous artist whose ancestors are from the western part of South Australia, as part of the Wirangu language group. Joy started painting only recently despite working for many years at Bunjilaka, the Aboriginal Gallery at the Melbourne Museum.

"I have been a participant in the Yarn and Art group for about two and a half years, and when I started never put paint on a canvas before and I convinced myself that I couldn't do it. I watched the amazingly talented group and the work they were producing and told myself that I could do that, and I did and have not looked back," Joy said.

Joy's canvases are painted with a background colour first, applied by a roller, and then Joy uses brushes or most often a toothpick to apply dots in compositions that relate to her ancestry.

"Before I start a new canvas I think about the stories, the colours of the landscape, and how I can put that on the canvas. The artists from my traditional lands inspire me to keep painting. We all use our stories and traditional lands for inspiration and interpret the same stories in different artistic styles."

To view Joy's work, visit: www.joysellarsaboriginalart.com.
